PREFACE.

It is reported that Lord Campbell prepared a Bill to limit the privilege of copyright to such books only as contained a proper index; he would have secured the lasting gratitude of students if he had completed his work and induced Parliament to make it law. Many otherwise valuable books with imperfect indexes or none are actually useless to the student, who rarely has sufficient leisure to turn over all their pages to search for the information he requires; these remarks apply especially to books of the class of "Curtis's Botanical Magazine" and "Sowerby's Botany," both of which are without general indexes: the editors of the former have published an index to the first forty-two volumes, then, passing over the next twenty-eight volumes, an index to volumes 71 to 86, and finally, an index to volumes 71 to 96. Mr. Quaritch, who has rendered so much service to lovers of books by his valuable catalogues of books with their complete indexes, published an index to volumes 54 to 70, so that on the completion of the 107th volume, to ascertain if a particular plant is illustrated, it may be necessary to search through three indexes and twenty-two single volumes, or without Mr. Quaritch's index, which is not contained in the publisher's issue, thirty-nine volumes.

The irritating waste of time involved in such searches induced me to suggest to the present publisher of "Curtis's Botanical Magazine" that he would confer a great boon on his subscribers if he published a general index to the entire work; however, much to my surprise, he declined to entertain the proposition even when the MS. ready for the printer was offered to him by an enthusiastic naturalist, Mr. Henry

Buckley, who had prepared it for his own use; but on my statement that I would publish the index, he offered to print it for me at my expense; I informed him that I was not so satisfied with the style of his publications generally as to care to accept his liberal offer; I had just then withdrawn my subscription to his "Floral Magazine" in consequence of its ill-executed and exaggerated illustrations.

If the publisher of "Curtis's Botanical Magazine," which has been, and still might be a work of very great value, consulted his real interests, and were more liberal, he would take care that the illustrations were as well executed as those in the much cheaper periodicals, the "Florist and Pomologist" and the "Garden;" and if the editor would select plants worthy of illustration and give fuller descriptions, especially of habit and culture, the magazine would lose none of its scientific interest, and becoming much more popular, the increased circulation would far more than compensate for the increased outlay. As it is, the interest in the publication is limited to botanists, and even some of these consider it now neither worthy of its former position nor worth its price.

Many years ago, when the work was edited by Sir W. J. Hooker, the illustrations were better executed, and the plants illustrated were generally interesting; now, when the processes of producing coloured plates are far more perfect and much less costly, the illustrations are inferior, and of plants which too often are mere weeds, neither useful nor ornamental, while many plants of great interest and beauty remain unillustrated. It were better if the editor and publisher had some regard for the original description of the book in the title-pages of the first two series, where it is stated that "the most ornamental foreign plants cultivated in the open ground, the greenhouse, and the stoves are accurately represented in their natural colours;" formerly, popular names and explanations of the scientific names were given, now, both are omitted, although the latter are becoming more mysterious and untranslatable than ever.

The general index of Latin Names is printed from Mr. Buckley's MS.; to this, at the suggestion of Mr. E. W. Badger, the editor of the "Midland Naturalist," I have added an index of Synonyms, compiled by my daughters, and a short list of Popular Names. As botanists' nomenclature is very curious and apparently limited by no rules, I have occasionally in the first index taken some liberties with the names; for instance, words ending in -anthus are in the text sometimes treated as masculine and sometimes feminine (it is difficult to understand why they should be either, as the Greek word ἄνθος is neuter, and the gender of the terminal generally settles the gender of the word); however, as botanists have usually made them masculine, I have for the sake of uniformity adopted that gender; again, derivatives of -εἰδής are rendered into adjectives ending indifferently in -es, -is, and -eus, as thyrsoid*es*, arctotid*is*, and thyrsoid*eus;* I have limited myself to the first of the three; generally, the irregularities in the nomenclature are very numerous: Penstemon is masculine; Platystemon, neuter; Maxillaria porphyrostele, neuter; Phytelephas macrocarpa, feminine; I have corrected only the most glaring mistakes; many other illustrations might have been given, but these are sufficient to indicate the nature of the liberties taken, which do not in any case interfere with the reference value of the index.

I have also taken the liberty of printing adjectives derived from the names of places or countries with the initial letters in Capitals, for I observe that if "Mr. Smith" be rich enough to patronise plants and their collectors or growers, botanists delight to honour him by entitling some remarkable plant "Smithianus," but if America be only the special habitat of a plant, and that is thought to be a sufficient reason for designating it after that continent, it appears in the pages of the "Botanical Magazine" in "lowercase" as "americanus," which is not a fair distribution of honours; and when a variety is distinguished in the text by a Greek letter only, where a word sufficiently characteristic could be found in the description, it has been substituted, for instance, Gladiolus blandus var. γ is in the index G. blandus purpureo-albescens."

The index of Synonyms contains only those in the text, with all their irregularities undisturbed and many descriptions from the older authorities which could not be condensed into names omitted; it would be more valuable if more complete. A friend of mine was so sanguine as to think some assistance in this part might be given by the authorities at Kew, more especially as the head of that establishment is editor of the magazine; on application a reply was received expressing doubts of the expediency of publishing the index at all without corrected names and synonyms; but stating no assistance could be given, and adding that to be a creditable performance the index should be revised by a competent botanist; it has not been submitted to this revision, as I am not a botanist, but only a lover of plants; however, I hope those who avail themselves of my labours will be as lenient as possible in discrediting my attempt to serve them. I cannot help adding that it would have been as well if the editors of the magazine had access to such an index even as I have printed; they would not then so frequently have made the mistake of reillustrating plants already depicted in their own work.

The form in which the index is printed enables those who take sufficient interest in the subject to make their own corrections and additions; and further, to keep the indexes posted up to the date of last publication.
